Advanced Clinical Supervision

The Relationship in Psychotherapy and Supervision

A recent task force of Division 29 of the American Psychological Association has summarized thousands of empirical studies and revealed that the single most consistently important factor determining the overall outcome of all therapies is the relationship between clinician and client. It follows that the single most important factor in the supervisee-supervisor experience is the imparting of an appreciation of the power of the clinical relationship and how to cultivate it.

Successful mental health services are based upon a working relationship between clinician and client that cannot be simply taught but can be learned through an effective relational supervisory process. This course surveys the research and clinical findings regarding how to co-create and maintain a supervisory relationship that is both effective and mutually enhancing. This advanced course presupposes that participants are already familiar with the rules and regulations of their own supervisory settings. This course satisfies licensing board requirements for supervision.

Learning Objectives: At the conclusion of this course participants will be able to:

- Identify and work with parallel processes in clinical work and supervision
- Tailor-make supervisory processes that fit different levels of supervisee professional development
- Accommodate the demands and limitations of the realities of supervisory settings
- Develop specific ways of building safety into the supervisory triangle
- Establish and appreciate the teach-treat balance for each supervisee
- Build greater multicultural and diversity sensitivity into supervision.
